

EMIS Good Deeds

The tradition of EMIS Good Deeds Day launched its way on Friday the 13th of April. EMIS Good Deeds Day is a collective volunteering day that will take place in April once a year where all the first-grade students contribute to the society together. This year we decided to focus on an environmental issue. During Passover, many people are traveling in nature and unfortunately leaving trash on the way. The trash enters into the water and causes pollution and danger for marine life. Therefore, thanks to Charney Center and to Nature and Park Authority, we went to the Sea Turtle Rescue Center in Mevo'ot Yam, we saw the turtles that have been saved and we discussed the central issue. Afterward, we went to the shore, divided into groups and picked up trash. In 2 hours we succeeded to fill up around 40 bags of trash that was left on the shore. By this, we helped to save turtles and other animals that could have choked or trapped by the trash. The experience was very powerful as everyone contributed and understood the meaning of their actions. One of the significant learning outcomes from this day was that we should always clean after ourselves and never leave human products in nature.
